

AN ARTIST INDEX TO STAUFFER'S
"AMERICAN ENGRAVERS"

BY THOMAS HOVEY GAGE

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

NO more impossible subject upon which to address this Society could be found than an "Index" unless it were the dictionary, or the encyclopedia. If, as has been said, the last thing in a book to read is the preface, it may be that the first thing to examine is the index. Certainly no book of reference is worth anything without an index.

Stauffer's and Fielding's works on American Engravers bid fair to remain authoritative, and both are well indexed for engravers and partly indexed for subjects. But engravers are for the most part only copyists; they reproduce on copper, steel or stone the work of another.

The late Frank Bulkeley Smith, whose pictures at one time hung on these walls, became very much interested in early American portraiture. It occurred to him that much valuable information as to the identity of the painters of early portraits would be obtained from an examination of engraved copies, and he expressed a purpose to prepare such a list. After his death there were enquiries for it from gentlemen in New York and Boston and among his papers was found an Artist Index to Stauffer and Fielding which his sons and daughter presented to this Society as a contribution to the study of art in America.

Stauffer and Fielding do not pretend to bring their list down later than to include men who were working before 1825. They therefore deal with the beginnings of art in America. Now the engraver copies; he seldom originates. When photography made copying easy, his art languished. But when he flourished he reproduced the work of artists which appealed to the public taste and would sell. There were artists whose chief employment was to supply material for the engravers. In England during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, portraits were painted for the express purpose of being engraved. Everyone knows the fine mezzotints issued by the Fabers, father and son. Thomas Hudson must have been kept fairly busy supplying their needs and some of the rarest and best impressions of their prints are now worth as much as the original portraits in oil.

In this country personages were not so much respected. There are innumerable prints of a few persons of distinction and popularity like Washington and Franklin; but we find a brisk business in painting or drawing scenes and buildings. For example our index shows 90 engravings after Birch, father and son, most of them views. Their work was more admired by Dunlap and Tuckerman than it is by us, although some of Thomas Birch's marine views are still esteemed. It seems quite certain that they painted for the engraver. So we find 35 prints after John Paradise, many of them by his son, John W. Paradise. Dunlap tells us that the Methodists contributed to the elder's employment as a portrait painter and that most of the engravings in the Methodist Magazine are from paintings by him.

Those who contend that contemporary judgment of art is usually wrong will notice that the index gives very few prints after Copley and only one after Malbone. But to offset this we find 104 reproductions of Gilbert Stuart and 42 of Thomas Sully. There are also 40 prints after Joseph Ward, 33 after Neagle, 23 after Inman and 11 after Henry Williams, including one of Isaiah Thomas.

The student will be glad to know that George Catlin, besides painting Indians, made portraits of DeWitt Clinton, Timothy Pickering and Tapping Reeve. There are also listed 15 portraits or miniatures by William M. S. Doyle or his daughter Margaret (one of Isaiah Thomas among them). One wonders why Doyle's portrait of Harriet Newell should have been engraved by three different engravers. The inscription on Ralph Rawdon's plate discloses that she died at Port Louis in the Isle of France, November 30, 1812, in the 20th year of her age, having accompanied her husband in the benevolent attempt to preach Christ to the heathen. The inference is irresistible that the reproductions were to embellish missionary tracts.

The versatile Peale family is well represented in the index. There are engravings from the work of Charles Wilson, Rembrandt, Titian, Anna, James and Raphael. These brief references will show the sort of information to be found in this Artist Index. Of course, comparatively few portraits were ever engraved, but with this index and access to a good collection of American prints like the Goodspeed collection owned by the Worcester Art Museum, enough authenticated work of early artists can be identified to afford the student and collector some basis for attributions to be given early American paintings.

This index also suggests a subject which has never yet received any attention. I refer to the itinerant portrait painters. They were interesting and picturesque personalities who have preserved for us the forms, features and dress of the people of their day. They were self-taught or received some meager instruction from one of the craft. Some of them, like Morse and Harding and Greenwood, settled down to careers of distinction; but most of them lived and worked in obscurity. In the small classes graduating at Dartmouth College in the year 1806 and 1807 there were three young men who became itinerant painters. One wonders what influence directed them, for, so far as is known, there was absolutely nothing at the time in that outpost of education to stir the artistic imagination.

A few years ago I talked with a very old lady, the daughter of one of these itinerant painters, and learned from her somewhat of her father's life. There were no supply houses then, and in the winter he prepared his own canvases, stretchers and panels and most important of all ground his own colors in oil and so prepared his paints. In the summer he set out, avoiding large places and cities and keeping to the countryside. He stopped with the farmers and in return for his keep, and such modest sums as they could pay, he painted the family. I have seen many examples of his work. Some of it is as hard and cold and stiff as the hospitality and pay were meager. Sometimes, however, he reflected, in the warmth of his color and ambitious attempt to vitalize the subject, the cheer and sociability of a happy home. So they wandered about, bringing the mysteries of the art into the family circle. Once in a while, either because they satisfied their own standards or because of the importance of the subject, or because the compensation and hospitality were generous, they signed and dated a portrait. But this was rare. For the most part they left it to speak for itself.
